LOGLINE

A jaded police detective (Simon Baker) travels to a remote town in the Australian Outback to investigate the cold case murder of a local Indigenous girl from twenty years earlier.

SYNOPSIS

Jaded police detective Travis (Simon Baker) arrives in the remote Australian Outback town of Limbo to investigate the cold case murder of a local Indigenous girl 20 years ago. As truths about the crime begin to unfold, Travis gains new insight into the unsolved case from the victim's fractured family, the surviving witnesses, and the reclusive brother of the chief suspect. Shot in starkly beautiful black and white, Limbo is a penetrating modern noir and a poignant, intimate journey into the complexities of loss. Writer-director Ivan Sen, one of Australia's foremost Indigenous filmmakers, deftly wields the police procedural to chart the impact of the justice system on Indigenous families in Australia.

IN CONVERSATION WITH DIRECTOR IVAN SEN

INSPIRATIONS

Limbo is a continuation of the themes I explored in my previous films Mystery Road and Goldstone. Those films dealt with primarily an Indigenous perspective of the justice system through the eyes of an Indigenous police officer. Limbo explores the deeper impact of a crime on an Indigenous family through the eyes of a white policeman. The source of these ideas has largely come from my own personal experience, from family members and friends who have been victims of crime. I have witnessed their struggle not only for justice, but also for fairness and recognition by the Australian justice system.

The characters in the film are all stuck in their own Limbo. They are unable to move out of their situations which have been created by their decisions and environments. The story is about their individual struggles to overcome that state.

They are all catalysts for each other's change, the change which will allow them to break out.

Limbo is a fictional place. I had planned to make a film set in Coober Pedy, which is a small, very remote town in South Australia, for many years. It's a very unique mining town where half the people live and work underground. The idea of Limbo also naturally grew from this underground world.

Another objective in shooting this film was to always maintain a continuum of time and space to achieve a filmic reality.

Who or what is in Limbo? The Aboriginal Family. The Detective. Indigenous Culture. The Cars. The Landscape.

IN CONVERSATION WITH DIRECTOR IVAN SEN

CASTING AND CHARACTER

I met Simon in 2004 about a possible project that didn't happen. I have always been a fan of his subtle style since seeing him in The Guardian. I think we were destined to work together at some point. It was refreshing to work with an actor who also directs. I had strong ideas about his character, Travis, and so did he. Most of the time, the ideas were mutually embraced.

I don't know if Travis is a hero or anti-hero. That's not really the point. He's a man looking for salvation and finds himself in a situation to do something about it.

While investigating other peoples' lives, he is also searching for answers about his own life and the personal things that haven't worked out, haunt him or that he has bottled up and shut out.

Prior to shooting Limbo, I spent quite a bit of time travelling to Coober Pedy, to find locations and cast. I wanted to use local Indigenous cast and found many of my cast on these trips. I was familiar with and admired the work of first nations actors Rob Collins and Natasha Wanganen, and they make a great brother and sister.

Simon and Rob's characters are both men who are hurt, in pain, and they start to see that in each other. Travis, the detective, has also lost his connection to his own son. But he decides to take the opportunity to help reconnect Charlie (Rob Collins) and his estranged son Zac.

IN CONVERSATION WITH DIRECTOR IVAN SEN

OUTBACK NOIR

Genre clearly provides good bones for stories and plots, and the Australian outback is a natural setting for western style films. The Trojan Horse is the experience of Aboriginal culture and perspective that is delivered from the underbelly.

Coober Pedy is an incredible location with its own underground world. It's a very harsh, dry, dusty desert environment and the locals have built their houses, churches and hotels underground to escape the oppressive heat.

The town is refuge for a diverse population of outcasts following their opal dream. Coober Pedy is also a tourist town and yet just beyond its borders traditional Aboriginal communities still live in their culture and language. These elements interplay with my approach to the film, itself influenced by classic 1960's and 70's Noir. Not to mention it's Black and White.

There are a million or more holes dug surrounding Coober Pedy to mine Opals. This also provided a powerfully visual contradiction - with the vast destruction of the environment, but at the same time creating an unnatural beauty, with the myriad mounds of exposed coloured rocks and soil.

The juxtaposition between the vast desert country and sky with the intimacy of personal trauma, loss and grief in our family felt both profound and yet familiar.

Besides a couple of conscious neo-Western elements, like a stranger riding into town, everything else is how I naturally responded to the landscape and the place. Coober Pedy is unique, and I spent a lot of time getting a feel of how I was going to create a world around it. I found every single location in the film, and I had a strong idea of how to shoot each of them. I bought the key props of the film and secured the hero's car.

All of these design elements were important in weaving the tapestry of the film.

IN CONVERSATION WITH DIRECTOR IVAN SEN

HISTORY AND TRAUMA

The more Travis finds out about the family of 20 years missing girl Charlotte Hayes, the more he is drawn to them and he sees the way they have been treated. Rather than the victims, the police and justice system have made them feel like they are the criminals to be blamed and then ignored.

Through my personal family situation and having made films about missing Aboriginal women and girls before, I have gained an insight into the unrelenting trauma this casts on our Indigenous families. The Police and the Justice System often don't really investigate or deal properly with such crimes. The thing I wanted to expose in this film is that even though the crime took place 20 years ago, it's never a cold case for the family. It could have been yesterday for them, they can't move on. Time is almost at a standstill in this huge desert country and I think the cumulative power of the film is in the intimacy we feel for the family, experiencing their pain, as we learn to know them through the investigation carried out by the detective Travis.

In movies, Indigenous filmmakers have now found a centre stage place in the Australian canon of films. So the industry has come a long way from the early short film initiatives from back when I began. However, the fact is – there is still a long way to go in terms of equality, justice and telling our side of the story.

Australia is still a place of injustice for Indigenous Australians. As a country we accept Indigenous ideas much more than in the past, but as Indigenous people, we are still living in an occupied country where the occupiers largely feel the land belongs to them. And the problems belong to us, the Indigenous people.

PRODUCER'S NOTE - BUNYA PRODUCTIONS

Ivan Sen's body of work marks him as a unique voice in Australian cinema. His multi-award-winning films, Beneath Clouds, Toomelah, Mystery Road, Goldstone and Loveland each have a powerful personal vision.

Limbo is a return for Ivan to his previous body of work, set in the outback and dealing with First Nations stories, characters and themes. These stories reflect and explore his own Australian Aboriginal heritage.

Limbo is set in the South Australian outback opal mining town of Coober Pedy. The black and white photography captures the incredible landscape beautifully and delivers a rich and profound sense of place.

The characters who populate this film are hardened souls surviving in a harsh and unforgiving town. But finding each other changes them, reminds each of them of their human compassion and thereby alters their destiny.

The world of Limbo takes us into this harsh desert landscape, and also into a racist world. There we explore loss, grief and justice, how Aboriginal people are treated by the justice system, as well as the intergenerational impact of racism.

As with all of his films, Ivan Sen took on a significant number of the key creative roles including Writer, Director, Producer, DOP, Editor, Colorist and Composer. This means a total immersion in and control over the construction of the film

Ivan Sen's films always say a lot about our society and identity, and Limbo is more than a crime mystery, genre film. Ultimately it is a poignant meditation reflecting back on our own sense of humanity and a deeper exploration of our desire to be human and to be valued.

CAST BIOGRAPHIES

Simon Baker (Travis Hurley)

Australian actor and director Simon Baker is known to audiences around the world for his engaging and charismatic performances across film and television. These roles include the titular character of Patrick Jane in the acclaimed CBS series THE MENTALIST which cemented his place as an international star. He has received numerous best lead actor nominations by the Screen Actors Guild, The Emmy's, and Golden Globes. Prior to The Mentalist, Baker also received acclaim in the CBS drama series THE GUARDIAN which also garnered him a Golden Globe nomination.

Prior to his move to the U.S. from his native Australia in his mid 20s, Baker found success at home in popular long running television series including E STREET, HOME AND AWAY, and HEARTHBREAK HIGH. His work saw him win the prestigious Most Popular New Talent at The Logies, Australia's television awards. Relocating to the U.S. in 1995, Baker quickly scored his first film role in Curtis Hanson's 1997 Academy award winning L.A. CONFIDENTIAL alongside Kevin Spacey, Russell Crowe and Guy Pearce. Numerous film roles followed with notable credits including the hit comedy drama THE DEVIL WEARS PRADA, Wall Street drama MARGIN CALL, Ang Lee's RIDE WITH THE DEVIL, Michael Winterbottom's THE KILLER INSIDE ME, the suspense thriller THE RING TWO alongside Naomi Watts, and an unexpected turn in Universal Pictures' action horror film LAND OF THE DEAD directed by cult-film director George Romero.

In 2013 Baker was honoured with a star on the Hollywood Walk Of Fame for his contribution to the entertainment industry, and prior to this in 2012 he was invited to join the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences.

In 2017 he Baker partnered with producer Mark Johnson and optioned author Tim Winton's acclaimed best-selling novel Breath. An avid surfer, Baker's passion for the coming-of-age story went beyond the pages of the book and ignited a long held ambition and desire to direct film. The film received outstanding reviews on its release in Australia in 2018 and has been described as "unpretentiously profound, with a very Australian (and very cinematic) regard for allowing natural beauty to speak for itself...a surfer film with soul and gravitas". Baker won Best Director at Australia's DGA awards and received 9 AACTA (Australian Academy of Cinema and Television Arts) nominations. Baker himself received 4 nominations; Best Film, Best Director, Best Adapted Screenplay, winning Best Supporting Actor. He is the first person to win in a performance category for a film they directed.

Baker's film HIGH GROUND which was released by Samuel Goldwyn film throughout Australia received critical acclaim. He followed up with BLAZE a film by Del Kathryn Barton which received numerous Australian awards including an AACTA for Baker as Best Supporting Actor. In 2022 he joined indigenous filmmaker Ivan Sen to star in LIMBO. The film won rave reviews for Baker as well as Sen when it premiered at the Berlin and Toronto film festivals. It will be released theatrically in spring of 2024 and again Baker has been nominated for an AACTA for Best Actor.

He will next be seen in the Netflix series BOY SWALLOWS UNIVERSE and is currently filming The Narrow Road to the Deep North with Jacob Elordi for director Justin Kurzel.

In addition to his acting and directing career, Baker is also very involved in environmental issues. He resides in Sydney, Australia.

Most recently David produced Ivan Sen's latest film Limbo which premieres in competition at Berlin 2023.

In 2022 David was awarded the Don Dunstan award at the Adelaide Film Festival.

Rachel Higgins (Producer)

Over the past 25 years Rachel has worked on over 50 feature film, television and documentary productions, with some of Australia's most esteemed producers - Al Clark, Andrew Mason, John Edwards – across all facets of production: the equivalent of over two decades of producing masterclass.

After starting at Kennedy Miller in 1997 - before moving to the UK working for Tiger Aspect, Granada, and Sky Pictures - Rachel returned to Australia to work for a decade with Al Clark ("Chopper", "The Adventures of Priscilla, Queen of the Desert") on the films "The Hard Word", "Thunderstruck", "The Book of Revelation", "Razzle Dazzle" and "Blessed".

In 2010 she associate produced the feature film "Red Hill", directed by Patrick Hughes, which premiered at the Berlin International Film Festival and sold to Sony in the US. Rachel's role included the financing structure, with "Red Hill" being considered Screen Australia's most financially successful film since its inception.

In 2012 Rachel produced the short "Lois" filmed in Australia and Greece. Starring Oscar-nominee Jacki Weaver, "Lois" screened at many film festivals including Palm Springs, Warsaw, Cleveland, Melbourne, Hof, Brisbane, released theatrically in Germany, and sold to SBS and Virgin Airlines.

Rachel associate produced the feature film "Apprentice", with Birdcage Films being the Australian Production Company. Premiering in Un Certain Regard, Cannes (2016), the film released theatrically around the world, after screening at Toronto, Busan, and London Film Festivals amongst many others, and was Singapore's Oscar submission.

Rachel is currently in postproduction on the iconic Ivan Sen's next feature "Limbo", which she produced with long-time collaborators David Jowsey and Greer Simpkin. "Limbo" will premiere in Competition at Berlin 2023.

Rachel also worked within Screen Australia Investment Department for several years. In 2014 she was selected for the Producers' Lab, Rotterdam. In 2017 Rachel completed an International Producer Placement at Maven Pictures (NYC). In 2019 she was selected as "One to Watch" by Screen Producers Association Australia, winning the International Prize.

Greer Simpkin (Producer)

Greer Simpkin joined Bunya Productions as Co-Managing Director and Producer in March 2015 after many years working in editorial and production roles in broadcasting – ABC (Australia) and Channel 4 (UK).

Since joining Bunya, Greer has produced the award-winning feature films Sweet Country, Goldstone, High Ground, Loveland, The Drover's Wife The Legend of Molly Johnson and was an Executive Producer on Jasper Jones. Greer is a Producer on Ivan Sen's latest feature Limbo.

Greer produced all three series of award-winning television drama series Mystery Road, adapted from Ivan Sen's original feature film Mystery Road. The Mystery Road franchise has won a total of 15 AACTA Awards and a TV Week Logie Award for Most Popular Drama. The series has been a ratings hit; the second series was the highest rating Australian drama on free to air in 2020, the third series Mystery Road: Origin is the highest rating drama on ABC iview in its 15 year history.

In 2021 Greer produced True Colours, a ground-breaking drama series set in the art world of Alice Springs and a remote Indigenous community, and with much of the series spoken in the local Arrernte language.

Prior to joining Bunya, Greer was Deputy Head of Fiction at ABC Television. Greer was instrumental in commissioning a large slate of new dramas and narrative comedies. As well as overseeing the entire TV Fiction slate alongside Head of Fiction, Carole Sklan, Greer was an Executive Producer of The Code, Hiding, Parer's War, Serangoon Road and The Secret River.

Before joining the ABC, Greer lived and worked in the UK. She was a Programme Finance Executive for Channel 4 for 6 years and, prior to that, Head of Production for Mentorn Films (now Mentorn Media) and a Producer for acclaimed photographer and filmmaker Brian Duffy.

Theodore Benton (Costume Designer)

After graduating in Design from the National Institute of Dramatic Arts, Theo moved into television at the ABC in both sets and costumes for 10 years, before going on to freelance design on many award-winning features and television productions such as series "Police Rescue", "Heartland", "Wildside", "Water Rats", "Supernova" 1 & 2, "Wolf Creek" 1 & 2, "Wanted 3" and features "Coffin Rock", "Inner Deamon", "Bad Blood", "A Sunburnt Christmas". Theo also Art Directed the feature "Sweet Country", and more recently Costume Designed the 2022 SBS series "True Colours", the 2023 Paramount+ series "Last King of the Cross", and the upcoming feature film "Limbo".

Toni Ffrench (Make Up & Hair Designer)

Over the past thirty years Toni has worked in the film and television industry on both local and international projects. Her credits include "Shantaram", "The Twelve", "Kong: Skull Island", "The Pacific", amongst many others.

Thom Kellar (Sound Designer)

Sound Designer Thom Kellar regularly works with Australia's leading directors as both a sound supervisor and sound effects editor including Warwick Thornton, Ivan Sen, David Michod, Jocelyn Moorhouse, Russel Mulchay, Jonathan Teplitzski, Matt Saville and Nash Edgerton amongst others. Thom has won an Emmy for sound mixing on Netflix's "Beat Bugs" featuring the music of The Beatles, as well as multiple ASSG award wins and AACTA nominations.
